Participation of Academic Libraries in Knowledge Economy

Genesis:

The knowledge economy and the growth of knowledge management, as an essential competency of organizations, provides new opportunities for librarians and information specialists to expand existing roles and utilize the skills they have honed to meet corporate objectives. The key information management role of both internal and external information, alongside the contribution to information competence and the ability to contextualize information, contributes to organizational excellence, customer benefit and competitive advantage which can be achieved more effectively through collaboration and partnership. The main three knowledge economy concepts- a) Globalization – markets and products are now global. Universities, like other businesses, and now competing and collaborating on a global scale; b) Technological advances and ICT - Connectivity and networking are enabling new and greatly enhanced products to supplement and replace existing products and achieve new markets using electronic delivery, and existing products are offered to a much wider market via the Internet and c) Information and knowledge – recognition of its importance in the economy. All business development relies on information and knowhow. Over 70 per cent of workers in developed countries are knowledge workers from authors to librarians, teachers to zoo-keepers.

As knowledge managers, librarians need to manage knowledge actively by recognizing our role in the knowledge management agenda and taking the opportunities that this provides by

- Fostering collaboration to achieve improved outcomes, making the best use of our resources and learning from best practice and bringing people together in communities of practice to solve problems and be creative including re-imagining how we can add greater value to the information we manage using the skills of those around us wherever these can be found.
- Making available the knowledge embedded in our own organizations by identifying and capturing the assets that already exist and providing access to this knowledge held in multiple sources. This includes assisting members of our universities to build reputation through alternative publishing models, thinking outside existing systems.
- Ensuring that information is easily accessible and managed according to need and constantly re-imagining how to unlock information that is created both internally and externally. Identifying barriers to access and developing plans to overcome impediments to information and knowledge creation wherever they exist.
- Ensuring that all of our limited investment is well justified by outcomes in research learning and teaching by taking a business approach to selection and access.
- Ensuring that users have the skills to use information well throughout their professional and personal lives.
